

Weapons Confiscated from Russian Mennonites in 1914 and 1915: Part 2

St. Petersburg Archives: Fond 821 Opis 133 Delo 323

Translation from Russian to German by Wilhelm Friesen, Museum Detmold, Germany; translation from German to English and comments by Glenn H Penner, Mennonite
Heritage Archives, Winnipeg, Canada (gpenner@uoguelph.ca)

Translated into English from a Russian to German translation by Wilhelm Friesen, Detmold, Germany.

The St. Petersburg archives contains a file (Fond 821 Opis 133 Delo 323) regarding the confiscation of weapons from Mennonites at the beginning of World War I. This file contains lists submitted from different parts of Russia of weapons confiscated from Mennonites. Geographical information varies tremendously from one submitted list to another. The original Russian location name has been directly transliterated. The exception is for the Molotschna and Chortitza colonies. I have converted those into the traditional German names familiar to Mennonite researchers. Otherwise, I have made no attempt to identify the locations given in the list as well as individuals. I leave that up to the researchers who use this document.

Since this file contains 11 different lists (with weapons confiscated from 2,199 people), formatted in different ways, the names have not been combined and alphabetized. This has not been done with the first names. The surnames are in bold and have been standardized to recognizable versions. Questionable translations or transcriptions have been highlighted in yellow.

Some technical terms have not been translated. The terms “single barrel”, “barrel” (meaning single barrel) and “double barrel” imply that the weapon was a shotgun. At least two hundred of the men mentioned on this list were obviously not of Mennonite background and were likely Germans who lived in the same villages as Mennonites. It should be noted that all Germans had their weapons confiscated, and the Mennonites were considered German by the Russian government.

For more information about what happened to the Russian Mennonites during the 1st World War see: Abraham Friesen’s book “In Defense of Privilege: Russian Mennonites and the State before and during World War I”.
